IN THE CUMBERLAND MOUNTAINS A physician told Tom Blake that he A physician told Tom Blake that he not only needed a change of scene, but that to regain his health he required absolute freedom from business cares. "I would advise you," said the doctor, "to get on a horse and ride away, no matter whither. Go to the mountains; shun the merest suggestions of civiliant health and the control of civiliant health and the control of the control of civiliant health and the control of civiliant health and the control of civiliant health and control of civiliant health he required absolute freedom from business cares."

mountains; shun the merest suggestions of civilization; in short, sleep out in the wilds, like a bear."

Blake attempted to act upon this alvice. He stuffed a few shirts into a pair of saddle-bags, mounted a joiting horse and rode up into the grandeur of rugged mountain gorges. One evening he came upon a narrow road, and, following it for some distance, saw a house. It was an old inn. He tied his horse to a fence and went into the horse to a fence and went into the house. There he found a man with a parchiment face and small, evil eyes, and a woman.

"Why, come in, str. come in," said the man, getting up and placing a chair for Blake. "Wife and I have been so lonesome for the last day or so we been wishing somebody would come, wishing somebody Haven't we, Moll?"

The woman removed a cob pipe from her mouth, drew the back of a skinny hand across her blue-looking lips, made hand across her blue-looking lips, made a noise like the guttural croak of an old hen with the roup, and said, "Yes," "You'll of course stay all night with us," the man remarked. "We can't possibly allow you to go on. I'll go out and put up your horse."

Blake entered no objections. The man want out up to the horse and

"Never mind, Moil," the host quickly responded. "It aint quite time for you to put in, except in the way of getting us a litte to cat."

She arose without replying, and began her hasty preparations for supper.

"It is a dull time of year with us," said the host. "It has been about two weeks since our last boarder left, but I reckon business will pearten up a little when the spring season opens." when the spring season opens."

which he had just quiked.

The old man placed a sputtering candle on the hearth, and, expressing the hope that his guest would pass a quiet and peaceful night, withdrew.

Blake lay unable to sleep. Once the sputtering candle caused him to spring up in bed. Suddenly his ears, extremely sensitive with his nervousness, caught the sounds of a whispered conversation.

"It won't do to shed blood," said the old man. "It won't do, for we made a mighty narrow escape the last time. It's impossible to get blood stains out of the house. We can't resk nothin', either."

"Where is that morphine?"
"Up thar in the bottle; but will that fix him?"

"Yes."
"How are you going to do?"
"I am going to make him take it."
Then there occurred a whispering of which Blake caught the following words:

"Think that's ernuff?" the woman "It's nearly a spoonful. Enough to make five men sleep throughout eternity."

A moment later the host entered Blake's room. His manner was free from embarrassment. In one hand he from embarrassment. In one hand he held a glass containing water.

"Stranger, I don't want to disturb you, but it occurred to me just now that you looked as if you might be going to have a spell of sickness, so I thought I would bring you some medicine. I am willing to help a man, but I don't want him to be sick on my hands. I am a doctor, but I don't propose to keep a hospital."

"Suppose I refuse to take the medicine."

"Then you'll put me to the trouble of pouring it down you, that's all. I am a mighty gentle sort of fellow as long as everything goes on all right, but if a hitch occurs, why I am as rough as as swamp oak."

'Are you sure the medicine will not hurt me "Hurt you! Why, it will do you

Blake drank the contents of the glass. The host smiled, bowed and withdrew. Then there followed another whispered conversation them. "Tuck it all right, did her"

Like a lamb. Ho'll be all right in a half hour. During fifteen or twenty minutes Blake lay quietly in bed. Then he got up, dressed himself noiselessly, ar-ranged the bed covers to resemble the form of a man, took his saddle-bags, stepped out at a back door, went to the stable, saddled his horse, mounted and rode up to a window and looked into the room which he had occupied. Cattle were tramping about the yard, and the noise made by the horse at tracted no attention. He took a position so that he could, unobserved, see all that passed within the room. The

Constipation,

IF not remedied in season, is liable to become habitual and chronic. Drastic purgatives, by weakening the bowels, confirm, rather than cure, the evil. Ayer's Pills, being mild, effective, and strengthening in their action, are generally recommended by the faculty as the best of aperients.

"Having been subject, for years, to constipation, without being able to find much relief, I at last tried Ayer's Pills. I deem it both a duty and a pleasure to testify that I have derived great benefit from their use. For over two years past I have taken one of these pills every night before retiring.
